OF ACADEMIC INTEREST

A Forum Sponsored by the Sub-Committee of the Dean William Parks Colloquium Committee

What should the goals of education be? Are these goals now being met? Have they ever been? Is there an education that everyone should have? If so, how should it be worked out? Should education emphasize our common humanity or our individual differences? What ends, if any, should education serve? Is there a difference in degree or in kind between education and training? What is the knowledge most worth having? What skills should an educated person have? What is the best way of obtaining these skills? Does citizenship in a democracy demand any special form of education? If there is a "best" education, should it be available to all? What is the relationship between being educated and being human?

Panel Members:

Liz Daly, Education Department
John Hoaglund, Philosophy Department
Mario Mazzearella, History Department
Ken Newell, English Department
JoAnne Squires, Psychology Department
Jane Webb, Physics Department
